

Message 04 . (March 2025)

How the prophets of the past adapted to their times in order to communicate

What invisible processes take place during dying.

How doctors and nursing staff can help the dying, including in palliative care.

How family members and friends of the dying can accompany them through their presence

The Spirit of Love greets you, loving and peaceful people. The Spirit of Love would like to give you a message from its inexhaustible source of love, which you may or may not read according to your human will. Never has the Deity, in its incomparable understanding of human beings, imposed its will on them. However, it lovingly gives them serious warnings and divine guidance. Therefore, the Spirit of Love, as God, advises you to pray sincerely to Him while reading these messages, so that He may help you understand the connections in their proper perspective. He fully understands that you are finding it difficult to read these texts at the moment. Please understand that there will be no absolute truth. These messages were written by human hands and are therefore not free from error. However, the reader should not use spelling or word choice as a guide to understanding these writings, but rather grasp the meaning behind the words. Human vocabulary will never be sufficient to express what comes to us from the source of love of eternal divinity. The prophets of old could only use words that could be understood by the people of their time who tried to receive them with a certain seriousness. The deeper understanding required to explain certain processes or events was very limited, which is why many ancient texts sometimes seem incomprehensible and inaccessible to the human mind. However, this does not mean that they are false or subject to human error. One must always take into account the time at which they were written. Likewise, one must always consider the meaning of the messages at the time they were conveyed. Many readers of these texts will rightly ask themselves how a human being can presume to believe that what he writes comes from the source of God's love. It seems rather presumptuous to publish such writings. This consideration is quite human and understandable from a divine perspective. The life of a messenger who, inspired by God and through the transmission of images, tries to put what he has received into human words is not easy. Above all, he is not infallible and is a human being like everyone else, with his obligations and daily concerns. There is always a great risk that souls connected to the Earth will interfere and try to contribute their thoughts and desires. However, these do not originate from the divine source of love and are therefore powerless and incapable of helping benevolent people who sincerely seek divine knowledge on their difficult path. They do not lead to a profound expansion of consciousness. Self-knowledge is sometimes painful and shows people what life on this planet really is. Earth is not the final destination of the soul incarnated in a human body. The Earth was never created by God, and man is not the crowning glory of creation. Due to his profession, the author of these messages has seen many people die and has thus gained a wealth of experience. Writing books on this subject to help people better understand the process of dying would have been one way to pass on his experiences, but there is already enough literature on this subject. However, there are inner processes taking place that are not visible to the naked eye. Nevertheless, every human being should be aware that their time on Earth is limited. The process of dying and thus the separation of body and soul affects children as well as young people and the elderly. This is a sad reality that will never change.

No one can escape it. The causes are manifold: illness, armed conflicts of all kinds, acts of violence, natural disasters, accidents, etc. The author of this message worked in palliative care for 20 years and yet was unable to fully understand many processes. He is therefore all the more grateful for the following message, which was previously unknown to him: at death, the soul incarnated in the human body separates from the earthly world to pass into the afterlife. Wealthy people, kings, the rich with their possessions, church leaders, authorities, and politicians are subject to the same laws of life. Nothing remains of their former glory, reputation, and prestige in the afterlife. Their souls are so burdened by their exploitative and selfish way of life that they will find it very difficult in the subtle world to detach themselves from the way of life they have loved until now. But they have no other choice. It will sometimes be difficult, even impossible, for them to accept the help of the beings of light and helpers who are sent to them, and to acknowledge that the life they have often led at the expense of others has disfigured their souls. Their souls are so burdened that they suddenly lack the energies they have always received from others, and they cannot replace them with anything. This is a sad and terrible state that can last a very long time until the soul realizes that there is no other way forward than to recognize itself, its former wrong way of life, and to repent. Then the tormented soul would find healing. In eternity, there is no earthly time, and so the state of spiritual suffering can last for thousands of earthly years. You kind people, always remember that there is NO ANGER OF GOD and that he would never harbor thoughts of revenge. That is not possible. He was not created that way. He was created as a kind, loving, understanding, and impersonal being. Unfortunately, God's gentle nature is portrayed by religious leaders as exactly the opposite. However, since all events and every human life are stored centrally in God, he knows all the connections, all the pains and sufferings of every human being and the soul that inhabits them, and can therefore, in his goodness and love, offer his help to correct the course of events, whether here on earth or in the hereafter. His offer of help will never end in a dead end of despair or spiritual suffering. Please take these words very seriously! It is human ambition to want to claim, as high church dignitaries, to preside over the faithful and act in the name of God or Christ. Throughout human history, this has led to much misery, suffering, despair, and even acts of violence. The selfless nature of God cannot be learned in theological schools or other institutions of higher learning, nor can the depth of His being be fathomed. GOD IS ACCESSIBLE TO ALL PEOPLE, without exception. Dear people, death never comes at the push of a button, as many of you sometimes assume. This is understandable, because the process of dying is very often postponed to a distant future. Unfortunately, it is inevitable that the moment will come when the soul can no longer remain in its physical shell, for whatever reason. Please understand that the statement "God has called him to Himself in His love and goodness" cannot be true. The beloved Deity does not call anyone to Himself! This is in no way consistent with His kind and loving nature. It pains the Deity in His deepest being when people have to end their lives on Earth, no matter how this happens. God supports life, builds life, and sustains life. This will always be so as long as there are humans. However, it is tragic that a free soul in its light and splendor voluntarily takes on such a burden by incarnating into a physical body. This is truly not a normal process. It was never the will of our ancestors, nor was it the will of God.

The separation that took place at the time of the original creation caused much grief, tears, and pain, for our ancestors knew in their infinite knowledge, acquired before creation, exactly what would happen and what the consequences would be when they used their concentrated primordial energies to create a material and visible creation through the Big Bang. What fascinates astronomers, physicists, and scientists about the creation of the universe is, in reality, a unique tragedy of such magnitude that humans are still unable to comprehend its full depth in its entirety. The spirit of love understands humanity's desire for knowledge and its eternal search for traces. Unfortunately, this knowledge cannot be explained solely through physical and mathematical calculations, equations, and theories. If the expansion of a person's consciousness is not given, if humility, modesty, equality, and impersonality are not present in a person, it will be impossible for the human mind to fathom and understand creation as a whole, which is the origin of its existence.

It is truly a misconception of many religious leaders, priests, and teachers to proclaim to their believers and followers the uniqueness of human beings from the supposed perspective of God, according to which they are the crowning glory of creation. This is not the case. Please understand this correctly. The divinity within me respects the will of all human beings and desires nothing more than their well-being on Earth. But this is not the case, and the dear Lord cannot and must not change this sad reality. He must respect the will of human beings in all his decisions. This has been the case from the beginning. If he were to act differently, it would have a negative impact on the entire creation, and harmony, equality, purity, and love among all heavenly beings would no longer be possible. This is the foundation of heavenly life; these are the principles and laws of heavenly life. The path of life for all people on this earth should consist of embracing these principles and laws of heavenly life. The sincere and deep desire should be to correct mistakes and refine and promote good character traits. Knowledge of the carefree heavenly life, the purity of all heavenly beings, the sincere desire to expand knowledge, the desire for new creations in harmony with ALL inhabitants of heaven should be the sincere desire of every human being. The desire of every human being should be to return to their heavenly home without detours. This return home never comes through self-imposed burdens or mortification of any kind. Never has the beloved deity demanded that humans lead a life of sacrifice behind monastery walls in order to be closer to her. The disappointment with such an earthly life will be great in the hereafter. Understand that all emotions and feelings experienced are stored in human cells. However, this information is never lost at death. When a person dies, their cells are not simply dead and all stored information does not dissolve into nothingness. That does not happen. After the separation of body and soul, all stored information is transmitted to the soul via fine energy threads invisible to the naked eye, like tiny channels, and is thus not lost. This information is necessary for self-knowledge in the afterlife. The soul is not a mindless, wandering spirit.

At the moment of death, which can be observed particularly in palliative care, invisible processes take place that are necessary for the dying person. Everything that a person has stored in the cells of their body during their earthly life is reactivated, and the dying person must deal with it. This process can sometimes take several days, during which the dying person is no longer receptive and is in a state of agony, as their body can no longer absorb and convert energy because the cells now have a completely different function, namely to transfer the stored information to the higher consciousness. If they were reactivated to ensure the vital functions of the human organism, the body's cells would be blocked in fulfilling this important task. It is usually very difficult for relatives and family members to watch the dying person go hungry and thirsty. However, consider these invisible processes as necessary. The intake of water and food would now be torture for the dying person. This must be avoided at all costs. The nursing staff caring for the dying person and, of course, the attending physicians are also called upon to help in this regard. In recent years, it has become clear that nothing should be given to the body in this final phase. However, it is the responsibility of the physicians and nursing staff to have clarifying discussions about this with those present. This will be a rewarding task.

But why do such processes take place? These are cleansing processes that make it easier for the soul to leave the dying body. Thanks to the information transmitted by the cells, the soul can orient itself in eternity. However, it will not always be easy to make sense of what has been experienced. Much weighs on the soul, which is burdened by a difficult way of life. Please understand that this message is not intended to be a burden or to cause fear. That is not the case. Rather, it is about awakening understanding in order to better classify these things.

It is understandable that restlessness can occur in the final phase, as the organism, which may be difficult to understand now, is working energetically at full speed. This can even lead to an increase in body temperature. It was always assumed that this was a centralization of blood circulation in order to maintain the vital functions of the organism. However, these processes of releasing stored subtle energy release an enormous amount of energy, which leads to an increase in body temperature. Can you imagine, my dear friends, what is going on in the body of a dying person before the soul can separate from the body? So do not worry if you observe these phenomena in dying people; it is a natural process of energy release that can cause these symptoms. However, the administration of appropriate medication can alleviate these symptoms.

Dear friends and relatives of dying people, do not worry too much about how you can offer your support. If you are silent companions and can understand and respect these processes, you have already achieved a great deal. Do not be surprised if it is no longer possible to communicate with the dying person at this stage. Please give the dying person the time they need for these processes to take place. It is not advisable to believe that the dying process must be accelerated or slowed down. Often, those present ask God to end the suffering as quickly as possible. From a human perspective, this is quite understandable, but you must know that this is not an ordeal, but a process of inner purification. Grant the dying person peace and avoid talking too much and discussing among yourselves. These are certainly not rules that the spirit of love, God, would ever give, but they should help you to get through this time as well as possible and to respect and support the invisible processes that are taking place within. Grant the dying person the external peace that is necessary for the inner processes to take place. In doing so, you will have done a great deal of good! The moment of separation of body and soul, i.e., death as humans understand it according to their human concepts, occurs when the inner processes are complete and the soul is ready to leave its body. Knowledge of palliative medicine is Why are the ambassadors not allowed to appear in public, give lectures, and teach people?

Why must the ambassadors refrain from unnecessary conversations?

The following topic, which originates from the divine source of all being, is to be passed on once again by people who are connected to God and are peacefully on your path of life and on the way back to your heavenly home, if this is your most ardent desire. The messages from the divine source have never changed, but have always been adapted to the respective earthly conditions in order to be of help and support to honest, sincere, and truth-seeking people. The current world situation is not good in any respect. Some of you may wonder why the messengers (prophets) do not appear in public as the prophets of old did. This question is justified, but it would cause difficulties for a messenger if he revealed his personality in public appearances. In order to receive a message, a high vibration is required. Even the smallest external details can quickly lower this vibration. If this vibration is not perceptible in the soul, it is not possible to receive a message. An ambassador can write about topics that are already known to the world, but receiving a message is something completely different. It provides information about things that are not known to people. A messenger can talk about a particular topic with people who are very interested in it for a limited time, but such a conversation must be limited in time, otherwise the messenger could gradually lose control of his thoughts and words and be tempted to talk about events that are no longer useful. Understand that the spirit of love never imposes itself, never tries to manipulate or influence people in their actions, because such a thing cannot exist in heaven. According to the principles and laws of heavenly life, there is no influence, no imposition, and no pressure. Manipulation, deception, and lies, as you are currently experiencing them to an increasing degree on your planet, have nothing to do with the heavenly way of life. This is only possible on Earth because of the human body, which can well conceal the actual state of many souls. However, as soon as a sensitive and God-oriented person begins to speak, they very quickly recognize the difference between the various sources from which their words originate. The human body can hide many things, but not its gestures and manner of expression. Strong and forceful words and attempts at persuasion never come from the divine source of love. If a messenger were to eagerly participate in a discussion, he would expose himself to great danger. He would be tempted to convey what he has received from God with too much zeal, thereby putting his own personality in the foreground. However, this is not in the interest of our deity. A messenger who is under the special protection of God through heavenly beings of light would then be completely defenseless, because the heavenly beings of light and protection would have to sadly withdraw from such earthly discussions in order not to run the risk of harm themselves. With love and devotion, in harmony with the Deity, they fulfill their mission of salvation, which consists of protecting a messenger from the influence of souls bound to the earth. If a messenger (prophet) of God were to appear before people and teach or exploit the mission he has voluntarily accepted in order to be regarded as a sage and receive praise and honor, this would have disastrous consequences for this once humble, modest, and impersonal messenger. Understand that although a messenger has his personality, he never flaunts it in front of others, but always stands on equal footing with his fellow human beings. He thanks the beloved Deity, the Spirit of Love, with all his heart and soul for every inspiration and every message he receives, and willingly shares them with people who are interested and then align their lives accordingly in order to return to their heavenly home without detours.

The prophets of old did not have the opportunity that is available today, thanks to your global means of communication, the Internet, to offer everyone the messages they received from the source of love. The messengers also have private lives and enjoy talking to their families or fellow human beings, but they do not engage in political discussions or other controversial debates. They withdraw and prefer to leave these loud discussions to those who feel comfortable with them and feel the need to express their opinions loudly. However, do not forget that such discussions are very exhausting and consume a lot of energy that you will later lack. Fatigue and exhaustion are the result. Therefore, as benevolent and pious people, you should not allow yourselves to be drawn into such dogmatic discussions. It is better to hold back and remain silent in the face of unpleasant remarks. This is exactly what this messenger had to experience two days after writing this text. The experience was wonderful. The conversation was conducted in such a way that in the end, mutual respect and gratitude prevailed on both sides. The author has deleted his previous report about his visions. Publishing these visions could give the impression that the author considers himself superior to the abilities of others. However, this should not be the case. That would no longer be humility, but arrogance. The messenger would like to sincerely apologize to his readers. In his next message, the messenger will instead talk about his own mistakes, which he still faces today and which he tries to overcome every day. So advanced in the love of God that you can trust the attending physicians and nursing staff with regard to pain management and possible sedation. Such therapeutic measures are entirely appropriate and justified. They enable the body to find the rest it needs for its internal processes to run their course.

You now understand that the process of dying cannot simply be triggered at the push of a button, like turning a light on or off. It is a necessary process of maturation, purification, and inner order.

In God's love
